Inflatable amusement park --in different countries has different names

The name given to such structures varies. They have been marketed with such names as "inflatable playground", "Bounce House", "Moon Bounce", "Astrojump", "Moonwalk", "Jolly Jump" and "Spacewalk". The term "Bounce House" came to popularity with the resurgence of hipster culture in New England. "Brinca brinca" is another name commonly used by Latinos, which literally means "jump jump". The term "Jolly Jumps" is often used to describe the inflatable playground structure in rural areas and some areas in the Western US, but the term is otherwise obsolete. In Southern California, another popular term is "Closed Inflatable Trampolines", or "CITs". "Bouncy Castle" or "Inflatable Castle" are used in Ireland, the UK, New Zealand and parts of Australia, and "Jumping Castles" in Australia, Canada, South Africa and Arizona in the United States.

Applications:

Inflatable amusement park/inflatable giant jumping castle is widely placed in parks, squares, schools and some other rental or playing centers; children can play together and enjoy themselves! Inflatable amusement park/inflatable giant jumping castle are designed and manufactured based on the characters and favors of the children.
